

Using Accessible Neurotechnology for Cheap Neurofeedback and Diagnostic Tools

The lower cost of hardware has created an opportunity to build low-cost brain diagnostic tools and to help improve cognitive functioning via neurofeedback. This talk will focus on the current technologies available, their potential use cases and assess their capabilities to be deployed in countries that don't have the necessary resources to acquire medical grade devices.